THE IMPORTANCE OF NETWORKING

Interview with Charlie Breems by Terrie Christian

Charlie Breems has been an artist all his life. Not having gone to art school, the art flowed out from him. He did take some classes locally, but has found that he is more excited and changed by the programs and contact with artists at Minnesota Artists Association than he ever was by the classes. He thinks that networking is a very positive way to find ourselves. He has had a studio for over 20 years, and 10 years ago he met Jeanna Meyers who has been a wonderful supporter of his artistic journey.

Charlie Breems

At MAA, Charlie met Marilyn Brown who is a book illustrator. Through Marilyn, Charlie saw an opportunity and has become a book illustrator himself. In the illustrators organization they both belong to, his peers have been letting him know they see him as a fine artist, even though they have formal education for it, and he does not. Through Marilyn, Jeanna and others in his art community Charlie is finding more success and confidence which is what the majority of us seek.

He says that Minnesota Artists Association members have wonderful things to teach each other. He sees ways that we could be even more successful at tapping into what is available. Our website is a very valuable tool that Charlie would like our organization to grow with. He foresees internet access to MAA as an important way to build our network of artists and provide access to those interested in our art.

October Demo by Greg Lipelt

A larger than usual attendance, 27, at the October meeting was rewarded with Greg Lipelt's informative presentation and demo. Greg's theme was how to break out of our comfort zone with our painting. He suggested to pick just one area that we want to work on in the next painting, possibly doing a new version of a previous painting. His pre-demo presentation was as instructive as the demo, as he showed excellent examples of what can be accomplished by concentrating on changing one element, value range, pushing color, texture, etc.

The aspect he felt he needed to concentrate on for his demo was size. He worked in inexpensive poster paint on a large format, reworking a previous landscape painting, explaining very well why he was doing what he was on the painting and eliciting suggestions from the audience. Thanks, Greg for an informative evening.

See you next month in Bloomington for a classical Russian take on a portrait demo.

Robin Butler Edgerton has an exhibit of her work currently at Curran's Restaurant.

Marjorie Moody was recently chosen (by a jury including members of the MIA curatorial staff) for the Art Perchance exhibition at the Minneapolis Institute of Art. The artworks were exhibited in the Second Floor Atrium of the Target Wing from September 19 through September 27. They were moved to the Third Floor Reception Hall for the big event on Friday, September 28, a fundraiser which will support the Friends of the Institute and MIA and help with transportation of school children to the Institute. Some of the paintings were in a silent auction and others, including Marjorie's, were in the "perchance" section. Patrons played games for tokens (or purchased tokens) and put them in the bucket by the artwork they wanted and at the end of the night there was a drawing from each bucket to see who won each piece. There was a pre-event party for just the artists and the patrons who had paid $150-500 a ticket for the event with butler passed hors 'd'oeuvres and champagne. Marjorie also recently sold 8 paintings at her home sale.
